November 21st.

To Messrs. John M'Carty, John Moroney, James Manning, Richard Brown, James Stevens, George Jackson, and the other two hundred voters and electors of Denison Ward, signing the above requisition.

A requisition such as this from so large a number of the influential electors of Denison Ward, under present circumstances, and at such a time, gives the proud satisfaction to believe that I still hold confidence of a very large number of the electors of the above Ward and during the four years that I held representation of this Ward, that I done my endeavor to promote the interest of the ward and the generally. Gentlemen, to such a requisition as I would make a very large sacrifice. But under my present circumstances, my business will require a large amount of my time, consequently I could not attend to the duties of the Committee, with that satisfaction to myself and benefit to me constituted, that I want me in accepting the high honour you intend conferring on me, the day may come when I can with confidence and strain, to place me in that high position. I am, Sir, your obedient servant.

your representative. But, Gentlemen, for the present must decline accepting your very flattering requisition. But, thanking you again and again for kind intentions I remain, Gentlemen, yours respectfully, their boats, and making other preparations for descending the river to the East Coast. Had they succeeded in their object, their fate would have been recorded not only in the annals of the river, but in the military journals across the continent. And had they, although defeated before they achieved all they had intended, they have only been driven back after all the great physical and geographical difficulties had been surmounted, and the army of the river, the army so trustworthy of a more successful issue. No privations, toils, or dangers daunted them. It was only when disease had wasted their strength, when the long-sickness had carried off many of their cattle, and a peculiar danger had threatened the remainder, that they gave up the dog, they agreed to have resolved to retrace their steps, or rather to strike across the country and regain the West Coast by the most direct route. Mr. Chapman's letter is short and suggestive; we are inclined to think that the suggestion we are inclined to think melancholy fate communicated—that eighteen of their servants (natives) had been murdered by the Matabele warriors, who country they crossed probably on their return. From this it could be supposed that the Wahai had been in the Wahai country, but that, during their preparations, they had descended the river for some distance, and before putting back had to suffer more than they had done before, from the treacherous Mossekatate and his followers. It is possible that the Wahai were surprised, after meeting a brother and Mr. Baines at the Falls, had proceeded further on a trading expedition, but it is not said in what direction.

POLYGAMY AMONGST THE KAPFINS.—The Natal Observer states that a public meeting took place in Durban on the 10th inst. In order, however, to bring the points mainly at issue before the public, we call attention to the following facts:—"That polygamy is a cherished and recognised institution amongst the Zulu nation, and that, in consequence thereof, they are a marriageable age, are sold by their fathers, whether they will or not, to the 'man who offers for their persons the largest number of the fattest cows. That twenty years of peaceful residence under British rule has equalised the sale of the Zulu girls, but that the practice still exists, where it

That the prizes gone up, and the richest stoutly debauched, and repulsive polygamists, with large harems, and their own slaves, have the best chance, being the most likely to be able to afford to give to their wives and children, and to their slaves, the best education, and wealth is necessarily much greater than the men who have no wife slaves. That when, as often happens under such circumstances, the girl sought after, after shriving from her repellant suit, torture is administered to her, as a Kafir died from the effects of the tortures administered by her father; but that the latter can do nothing, owing to the law of the land, be punished. That polygamy, wife-slavery, and their consequent evils, are the cause of the degradation of the people, and that the British Government is in force here according to the royal instructions.
That the British Magistrates are unable to shelter a Kafir girl fleeing from her pursuers, but have to give her up to her father and to his accomplices.
That the British Government is unable to

How CATTLE STEALERS ARE PUNISHED IN KAFFIRLAND.—At the Circuit Court at Uitenhage, the first criminal case was that of a Kafir from a guilty of stealing a cow from a white farmer. The accused was a victim of receiving the oxen knowing them to have been stolen. Both prisoners were indicted for stealing the goat. The Chief Justice in passing sentence told the prisoners that if the present cattle-stealing could not be stopped, the Government would be unable to continue their occupations, and it was not only his duty but his intention to visit every offender, who was found guilty before him of such offences, with the very severe sentence. They would be sent to the Cape for a term of years.

The place where they committed the offence, and their countrymen might, perhaps, be induced to refrain from such practices on learning of their sad fate. They would be placed under such regulations that they would have to earn what it cost the colony to keep them, and for a long period they would work for the public. William was the worst offender, because he stole his master's oxen; he would therefore be sentenced to earn his hard labour, and at the end of that term he would have to serve three months for stealing the goat. Jan would be sentenced to two years' hard labour, for receiving the stolen cattle, and after that he must serve three months for stealing the goat.

THANKSGIVING FOR THE ABUNDANT HARVEST.

The following letter has been addressed by the Archbishop of Canterbury to the clergy of his diocese:—

“Addington Park, September 11, 1863.

“Rev and Dear Sir,

witnesed of the in-gathering of a most abundant harvest during a singularly favourable season, calls for our devout acknowledgments to Almighty God for the instance of His providential care in thus blessing our endeavours. In the assurance, believing that He will be congerial to your own feelings, that public thanks should be offered in the Church for our Heavenly Father's goodness towards us, I trust that the members of our congregation, which we, the inhabitants of your parish may meet together in the House of God to offer through the services of the Church, the outpouring of their grateful hearts for the signal mercy thus vouchsafed to our land. In the contemplation of the great blessing of a large portion of our manufacturing population, and the relief of our distresses will be deepened, when we reflect how vastly such sufferings would be aggravated by a scarcity of the staff of life during the coming winter.

It is a privilege to be permitted to stand before you as a thank-offering, after the sermon which has been preached: and, as there is no diocesan church build-

This census of 1851 found in England and Wales 50,290 persons who were born abroad and subjects of foreign States; in 1861 the number had risen to 84,090. Every quarter of the globe had its parts in settlements here when the people were enumerated in 1861—Europe, 73,434; Asia, 358; Africa, 518; America, 952; 275 not being classed. This, of course, without counting natives of our own colonies, or English subjects who bore no other name.

born abroad. Of the foreigners in England in 1861, 12,989 were from France, 1633 from Russia, 3616 from Prussia, 1074 from Austria, 1074 from Hungary, 1074 from Sweden, and Denmark, 6512 from Holland, 327 from Belgium, 231 from Switzerland, 1337 from Spain, 927 from Germany, 4489 from Italy, 574 from Greece, 331 from Turkey, 2138 are returned as Germans, 1669 as Austrians, 1074 Hungarians, and 7026 as Prussians; but there is reason to believe that many of these last three countries are understood, and that some who were born there are included in the numbers referred to "Germany." There were in England, 861 Americans (United States), 490 Brazilians, 160 Mexicans, 1229 Chinese, 1074 Indians, 1074 Persians, 1074 Russians. All these numbers may be considered as approximately undervalued, inasmuch as they do not include children born in this kingdom of foreign parents. Of the 73,000 foreigners in England are in London. Of the 73,000 foreigners in England were engaged in commercial pursuits, and 19,040 were domestic servants. Wives, children, and domestic servants constitute also a very large class. Among the foreigners in England there were, if the truth must be told, 77 nuns (46 of them Frenchwomen), 14 sisters of mercy, (all French but one), 7 monks, and 127 Roman Catholic priests. On the other side there were 58 foreign Protestant ministers, and 106 other "religious teachers," of whom 25 were females. 278 of the foreigners belonged to the medical profession, including 105 druggists under that description; 45 were "in the law," 196 were literary men. There were 547 artists, 2248 musicians or teachers of music (of whom only 121 styled themselves "street organists"), 3300 other teachers and governesses, and 4435 servants. Among the merchant seamen in port were 15,561 were foreigners. In all England in 1601 one person in every 239 was a foreign subject, and the foreigners were together equal to two-thirds of the population of Oxfordshire.

That simplicity of manner which is in itself grace was very conspicuous as the men took their places at the

and their robes and costumes, coupled with the swiftness of their movements, and the rapidity of the difference to a second in their position, was calculated to awaken all the warmth that Englishmen are accustomed to feel when thinking or reading of the brave defenders of their own sea life. Many of the men were of the type of a noble and gallant soldier. All the strength, all the pluck, all the generosity, the tenderness, all the nobility which have ever distinguished men, either at sea or ashore, in peace or in war, were here to be seen. St. George's Hall had been the scene of many grand and imposing assemblages, but never before had so many noble and gallant men, so heart-stringing, no more exhilarating, and certainly more enthusiastic assembly was ever within its walls.

Through the kindness and consideration of Colonel McIver, who had placed a trusty band of his stewards at the disposal of the committee, the men were long in being set before the guests; indeed, the majority of the truly English fare had been placed on the tables before the men entered the hall. There was more than that which is the bore of many public and private misery which precedes the announcement of dinner and during which men have to try to stare each other out of countenance, or quietly restrain themselves to almost frozen death by the rigidity which reigns over all. Each knows each other's hidden hostilities and smiles. The way in which men change places and skip over chairs to reach a brother messmate was a treat to see, and the pleasure which beamed on the countenances of sailors and marines bespoke the heartfelt joy. At some dinner parties the ice was long in coming, but the men were patient, and if it came then the sunny smiles would chase away all the gloom.

But all are seated. The band is still, and the chairman (Mr. S. R. R. Graw) rises to announce that, in the opinion of the chairman, the dinner is the best that has been served on board the ship since the late lamented Mr. Alfred Smith, the chaplain to the Seamen's Bethel, whom he expected to be present, but whose tickets, he supposed, had miscarried, the duty devolved upon him to ask God's blessing on their feast. This was Jack Siggal for action, and he was soon broadside on the subject of the dinner.

he exhibited, and the vigorous fire he maintained proved that he would give no quarter. Each man was supplied with a bottle of Allsopp's ale and a half pint of rum punch; a couple of apples were added to each man's ration. The victuals consisted of a couple of boiled beef, boiled ham, together with vegetables various sorts, followed by plum pudding and Crimean sauce, all of which seemed to be heartily relished by the seamen. During the dinner Mr. Best played the piano, and the singing was very good. Throughout the full response of the magnificent instrument producing the effect of a grand military band.

At length, one by one, the men began to fall back. Bursts of inextinguishable laughter broke out and the chief object was to stay undisturbed, and it was soon apparent that no one of them was to be left amongst the men, but that they were not very shy using it. When the chairman saw that the tables—as the sailors would have it, the decks—were being cleared, he rose and a few simple words returned thanks. And here it was that the sailors rendered the good service which Mr. Graves rendered by the readiness, to energy, and great ability he displayed on this as on many other occasions. It is every way creditable to the committee—indeed, to the town—marking the manner in which they were so judiciously and intelligent as they were by Mr. Graves, and we hope it is not the last time that he will be associated with other Liverpool worthies honouring themselves whilst they honour the town, as they

"Friend Graves, as they
And earn the luxury of doing good."

The first toast was, as a matter of course, "the Queen." The bugler, whom the chairman had behind him, blew it, and the attention of the assembly was directed to the Queen.

The Chairman then rose and said—Non commissioned officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines of the Channel squadron, the devotion of the seamen as marines of England and to their sovereign has been often praised and rewarded. The Queen, the Queen, the Queen, the Queen's titles, there is in one she values more than being considered the friend of the soldiers and seamen of England. (Loud cheers.) I give you the Queen, "with all the honours." The choir, with the full heart of the organ, proposed, and then rang out a burst of tumultuous cheering such as was positively thrilling in its effect on the audience. The very quiet nature of the applause which auditors are accustomed to give, or rather in which they are accustomed to indulge, in Liverpool, stood out in strong contrast to the cheering of the other towns. Some waving hats, and all bespeaking earnestness, whilst the full power of lungs was turned on to tell of their devotion to their Queen. There was something truly stirring in the ring of the men's voices. It was a matter of course that the Queen's name was a matter of course; there was life, intense devotion and earnest determination in it. The cheering course did not be stilled without an effort on the part of the chairman, who at length announced that the orchestra of the Philharmonic Society, led by Mr. Henry Sudell, would sing "God save the Queen." This was done in excellent style, the vast audience all standing and the sailors joining in the chorus most enthusiastically.

The Chainman then said—There is one ship in our port which bears the good old name of Liverpool, and I think in this town that her crew should take precedence and sing the first song to night. (Hearty applause.) Now call upon the crew of that ship to sing. (Cheers.)

Saunders, one of the marines of the Liverpool, rose to respond to this, and standing on a chair sang a song to the burden of which was "The Death of Lord Nelson." But the chorus of which was " Brave British Boys." When he came to the words "Describe what they did with their foes during the fight—"

"Some we sent into the air,
And some we sent below."

This disposal of the foe seemed highly satisfactory to the audience, and the song being finished, the singer was clapped on the back by some of his comrades, whilst others manifested their approval by waving a bottle over his head. John Laurie, captain of the mainpout of the Liverpool next sang "The Red, White, and Blue." The song was given amidst opportunity for the exercise of the vocal powers.

his mesmates, and must have proved a great treat to the gallery and audience. The full roll of the voice in "Three cheers for the red, white, and blue" was something to which even St. George's hall is accustomed.

The choir next sang a madrigal, which so charmed the ears that nothing would satisfy them but an encore with which the orchestra kindly complied.

Then the choir sang the good qualities of the members of our Royal Family, which all must understand them to you. (Cheers.) You had the honour of guarding to our shores the illustrious Princess who is now the bride of our Prince of Wales. (Cheers.) The seamen of England will be found on our sailor Prince, looking as I have said, as you know, and the very type of a British sailor. (Cheers.) I propose "The Prince and Princess of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family."

The choir then gave "God bless the Prince of Wales," accompanied by Mr. Bees on the organ, and when the enthusiasm which this awakened had subsided,

The Chairman called upon one of the crew of the cutter for a song. This had the effect of rousing the crew to sing the Edgus to great pitch of excitement. The man chosen to represent the vocal ability of the flagship was a seaman named, John Frederick Bax. A weather-beaten son of Neptune, who stood on the table against one of the pillars of the organ gallery and sang, with a hoarse, throaty voice, and stroking down his hair, sang, "Why did you leave?" An encore was tumultuously demanded, when he substituted "The sailor's child," which met with quite as hearty a reception. He then appealed to the sailors on behalf of the poor sailor's wife, and sang, "The sailor's wife," the singer's voice, told of the earnestness with which the songs and ballads are received by the sailors, and realises what has been said about the influence of song on the life of the deck.

The Chairman then rose to propose the toast of the evening, "The naval commissioning officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines of the Royal Naval Squadron." He said—"The important services rendered by the naval commissioning officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines of the Royal Naval Squadron."

dered by the navy of England from its earliest entrance justly entitled those who now maintain the honour and recovery of its glorious deeds to the warmest recognition which a grateful country could bestow. It was but last night we had the privilege expressing our acknowledgments to the officers that service in the persons of Admiral Dacres and his gallant command, and to-day we have, on the behalf of the nation, the no less distinguished and thankful the seamen and marines of the whole navy through their messmates of the Channel fleet now present in this the people's hall. It is not in accident or defiant spirit that the town has offered this great welcome to the seamen of the Channel fleet. It is true we glory in our town-ship and believe that each one equipped is an additional security that peace will be maintained; but it is simply because we have been taught from childhood by females. (Laughter.) Why, it is enough to make the blue jackets' hearts jump like a dolphin—(laughter and cheers)—and all the heads go round like capstans, making us all feel as if we were going to be rescued from the haven of joy instead of sailing up the Mersey (Laughter and cheers. The public at large show how much the Channel fleet is made up of men held in their estimation. They are all cheering and waving their hands. I see how high the spirits are. I see how they are all cheering. As high as St. George's bells. As high as the main trunk here—the cockpit holysty—My cable is very nearly run out to the clinometer will not detain you longer. If all the same—when the fleet will fill their glasses—if they are not getting on their feet, I will fill their glasses will do—(laughter)—I know there is not a man here who will not pass over the heads of the men but who hears the solemn one bell strike will toss up his hands and say, 'Here is success to Liverpool.' (Cheers and clapping.) Now, I will fill your glasses with the forgetful, the 'royal' brandy, and drink 'em up.

seamen and marines will give me three times as much thanks, and give in return for the lady mayor and all the female

On rising to propose this toast the speaker was received with loud and continued cheers. He spoke with great freedom, and his familiar language and the ease and fluency of his delivery gave taste, and gallant feeling, raised for him
the esteem of the visitors. He was a broad-chested, featured, dark-eyed yet, with curly locks, and seemed to be the pride of his mates, as well he might be.

THE CHAIRMAN: The last speaker has suggested the idea of going on shore and wanting somebody to him. I can only say if ever I go on shore I shall

I can assure you that if you have a pleasure with this party, I shall be it to you (Loud and continued applause.) I need tell you, men of the Channel fleet, that you are come in the town of Liverpool! The cheering was so loud, that I could hardly hear you as you came down this hall sufficiently testified that you were is of every man, woman, and child in the whole munition—(hear, hear)—and there is not one of you witnessed your procession who did not wish to be in the Channel fleet would visit the pool again. (Hear, hear, hear.) I need not tell you that even our pleasure this evening is altogether pleasure unmix'd with regret—(“Oh, and that regie is, that we have not a building that would hold every seaman in the Channel fleet in the port of Liverpool.”) I hope when you return to your ships to-night you will tell your comrades that it was not our or the fault of the town, that you had not every of your comrades alongside you to-night. (“I hope you will tell your comrades that we have a building large enough to hold the whole town to-night.”) and see you. (Laughter and cheers.)

My friends, let me simply assure you that we are delighted to see you here to-night, that we are proud to have you here, and we hope to see more of you than we have in the past. (Cheers.)
A blue jacket now made his appearance in front of the organ gallery and called for three cheers for the choir, which were cordially given.
The choir, consisting of one volunteer, sang better than a dozen pressed men, and he therefore took great pleasure in informing them that Mr. Stoye volunteered to sing "Hearts of Oak." The announcement was received with shouts of approval. Mr. Stoye, a young man of about twenty years of age, sang the song with great vigor, the soldiers in the chorus giving plenty of tune and plenty of time. An encore was demanded vociferously, and Mr. Stoye added further to the enjoyment of the audience by singing with a great deal of energy "Simon the Sorcerer." The song was well taken by the tars, and Mr. Stoye's mission of Dame Margery's voice gained for him round

The Chairman said: "I know not how it is 'Sweethearts and wives' should become so a thial. (The choir sang, 'Sweethearts and wives' makes the heart grow fonder, therefore, always keep that toast. (Chorus.) I don't say you will be very angry with me for prop this toast because it is not Saturday night, but I think this week with it on board, and we close this evening's song with the toast of 'Sweethearts and wives.' (Loud cheers.)

The choir sang "Rule, Britannia;" and hearty cheers having been given for the Queen, three of the chairmen, the proceedings terminated.

It ought to be stated that towards the close of the proceedings Mr. Robert Hartley presented a memorial which had hung during the evening on a miniature flag, as a memento of the feast DEATH BY DROWNING.—The Dubuo correspondent of the Western Post writes:—It was an unpleasant and painful task to record the death of Mr. Sanderson, an overseer in the employment of John Musson, squatter, of Murrumbidgee, which was caused by the sinking of a boat in the Macao river, at Murrumbidgee, about fifteen miles from township. It appears that on Thursday, 5th Nov. the deceased and a man named Nicholas Doyle took some sheep over the river in a boat, and while in the middle of the river, the boat, which was leaky, was upset. Mr. Sanderson and his companion became alarmed, and jumped into the water; the deceased being unable to swim, was carried down by the stream, which was running rapidly, and although diligent search was made for some time, he was not found until Monday, the 9th inst. when his companion Doyle, who was in the boat, exerted he rescued the bank of the river.

THE MORPHEUS DEPUTATION.—We learn from number of the late deputation from Morpheus to Minneapolis, that, after their acquiescence in his proposition was not made known to them, they had advocated; but that, seeing that Mr. Owyah wished to try experimentally the effect of system of reductions, they accepted his concession to Morpheus as evidence of a desire to do their own justice. — Journal.

IMPORTATION OF CATTLE TO NEW ZEALAND.—The Auckland Provincial Government Gazette of the instant contains a proclamation by Robert Graham, Superintendent of the Province, which declares as follows:—"That from the date hereof [October 3] and until further notice, it shall be lawful for persons to import cattle into the Province of Auckland, from the following places, viz.:—The Island of Great Britain and Ireland, Tasmania, South Australia, Victoria, New South Wales, Western Australia, Port Phillip, Jersey Bay, Port Stephens, Newcastle, Port Jackson, Clarence River, and Sydney, N. About half the foreigners in England are in London. Of the 73,000 Europeans, 21,395 were engaged in commerce, agriculture, and 19,040 in industrial occupations. Wives of foreigners and domestic servants constitute also a very large class. Among the foreigners enumerated in England there were, if the truth must be told, 77 nuns (64 of them Frenchwomen), 14 sisters of the Holy French but none, 7 monks, and 127 Roman Catholics. Of the other side there were 56 foreign Protestant ministers, 100 "free" or "religious teachers," of whom 25 were females. 278 of the foreigners belonged to the medical profession, 288 were "doctors, druggists under that description; 45 were "in the study of literature, 547 artists, 758 musicians, 284 students of music (of whom only 121 styled themselves "street organists"), 3300 other teachers and governesses, and 4485 "other persons engaged as the merchant seamen in port person in every 239." Princess who is now the bride of our Prince of Wales and amongst the seamen of England will be found o

The choir then gave "God bless the Prince and Princess of Wales," accompanied by Mr. Best on the organ, and with the enthusiasm which this awakened had subsided.

The Chairman called upon one of the crew of the Edgar for a song. This had the effect of rousing the crew of the Edgar to a great pitch of excitement and they were chosen to represent the vocal ability of the ship. The chosen singer, a young man, who was a weather-beaten son of Neptune, who stood on the table against one of the pillars of the organ gallery and after hitching up his trousers and stroking down his hair, sang with considerable taste and feeling the following song:

"Why do you sailors come to sea as heres we tummies usually demanded, when be substituted for a child," which met with quite as hearty a reception. The appeal to the sailors on behalf of the poor slave and the feeling displayed in the tone of the singer

The Chairman then rose to propose the toast of the evening—"The non-commissioned officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines of the Channel Squadron." The toast was proposed and was cordially received by the navy of England from its earliest existence justly entitled those who now maintain the honour and renown of its glorious deeds to the fullest recognition which a grateful country could bestow. It was but last night the Channel Squadron, expressing our acknowledgments to the gallant service in the persons of Admiral Dacres and his gallant comrades in arms; and to-day we have, on the staff of the whole town, the no less pleasure of the presence of the marines of the whole navy, through their messmates and their officers, present in this the people's hall. It is not in any boasting or defiant spirit that the town has offered this great demonstration to the seamen of the fleet.

And it is true we glory in our iron-clad and believe that each one equipped is an additional security that peace will be maintained; but it is simply because we have been taught from childhood taking some sheep over the river in a boat, and near the middle of the river the boat which likely began to fill with water. Sanderson and his companion became alarmed, and jumped into the water, but the terrible swell was so great that they were carried down by the stream which was rising rapidly, and although diligent search was made for their bodies, it was not found until Monday, the 9th inst. when the companion Doyle could swim a little, and by the aid of a rope was hauled out of the river. Doyle, deceased, who was highly respected of the neighborhood, was a married man, and had three young children. About a fortnight previously a valuable servant in the employment of Messrs. Kyrie and Alexander, at Euromed, was drowned in the sudden rising of the same river. The poor fellow had been out to feed the time a hundred sheep, which were also drowned.

THE MORPETH DEPUTATION.—We learn from a member of the late deputation from Morpeth to Minister for Public Works, that their acquiescence in the proposed scheme was not an abandonment of the views of the Morpeth deputation, but that Mr. de la Bore wished to try experimentally the effect of a system of reductions, they accepted his suggestion.

CAPTURE OF A LARGE PORPOISE.—Mr. Quinlan, of the North Nightingale, has reported the capture of a large porpoise, of Bellamira Bay. The porpoise was occupied nearly three hours in playing with the boat before it could be got out of the water. It measured between eight and nine feet in length, and weighed nearly 100 lbs. It was a fine specimen of the porpoise, and was sold with vigour when it was taken to the Manilla Express of Saturday.

And I further proclaim and declare that the said
 clamation of the 28th day of February, 1862,
